There are tons of books that have been banned over the centuries, such as: some works of Shakespeare, like "Twelfth Night" or "Kings Lear".

Graphic depictions
 Portrayl of sexuality
 Profanity
 And many more

The main things that it boils down to is that, banning books is censorship, telling people what they can and can't read? That is a recipe for disaster

So what actually happens when a book gets banned? Well multiple things can and will happen such as:

Removal from library and or libraries
 Not allowed to be published
 Not allowed to entry a country

Not allowed to exist, allowance of destruction of book

In some past cases they would kill the author

But why ban the book in the first place? Many reasons can come to the cons of banning a book such as:
